Debra - What are you doing? Good question.. let me explain!

The Now Story - onward65.com

At this age of retirement, I am being asked why "onward65". I have made many different choices throughout my working career and have been pushed constantly by learning new skills that I had not been educated in. I am now stopping to look at what I have learnt and what I want to do with this learning. So, passing on some of these skills to help others is what "onward65" is about and "sharing skills as needed" is the simple goal. Giving back is what life is for and addressing someone else's needs with kindness is the purpose of this direction. Have a glance at my resume to see some of the components of my career that might be of interest to work together on. My needs are not great, so my time will be affordable for all users.

Below is a list of some of my starting thoughts of services that could be shared:

- Making changes to websites to keep them current, freeing up staff for other responsibilities and assisting non profits and small companies to have a current site.
- Assisting with events in many different capacities.
- Consult with small side businesses to see what tools are missing and how can I help.
- Creating legacy pieces with families to keep all aspects of "family memories" saved for sharing to future generations.

•

Pieces that I am working on through further learning to add to skills to share:

- PowerPoint presentations
- Social Media platforms
- Content Management
- Virtual Assistant
